

“... the aviation insurance has hitherto been no very lucrative business for the firms managing same. There have further been difficulties to obtain the sufficient number of insurance objects, through which a compensation could be obtained. In spite of the poor bearing capacity of this insurance line a great number of insurance companies have taken up this business. Where is then the reason of this interest in a business which cannot at present be considered profitable? ... “